Dear Chairman Powell & the Commission:

Please consider what the unbundling rules have done to the economy. So many hundreds of thousands of jobs have been lost in the telecommunication industry due to unfair pricing structure of wholesale network products. Small start-ups are today just in the business to make a quick dollar and do not care about long-term business stability. These companies make the market volatile and hurt economic stability. The market is judged by the consumer. Allow the consumer to choose the best product and let the market regulate itself.

It is unfair to ask any business to sell its' infrastructure to its competitors for less than it costs that business to provide it. How fair is it for the competition to then sell it at lower cost, yet make a profit and put the other company out of business? That is the direction of this legislation. Please reconsider your actions. Those people without jobs are real. Thank you.

Sincerely,
Steve Groves
